Passage - I

A stout old lady was walking with her basket down the middle of a street in Petrograd, to the great confusion of the traffic and with no small peril to herself. It was pointed out to her that the pavement was the place for pedestrians, but she replied : "I'm going to walk where I like. We've got liberty now." It did not occur to the dear old lady that if liberty entitled the pedestrian to walk down the middle of the road, then the end of such liberty would be universal chaos. Everybody would be getting in everybody else's way and nobody would get anywhere. Individual liberty would have become social anarchy.

Passage - II

Both in spirit and character there is a great difference between the English historical plays and the Roman plays. The theme of the English historical plays is the success and the failure of men to achieve their goals. The theme of the Roman plays is a spiritual one— the ruin of a noble soul. In the former, the measure of greatness is the success that a man achieves in the material sphere of life. In the latter, the men who fail are not necessarily less worthy of admiration than these who succeeded. In Julius Caesar, Brutus fails miserably from material point of view, yet we admire him immensely for the nobility and greatness of his soul. 4×5
